Identification of PLC gamma 1 as a receptor of C5a anaphylatoxin. C5a anaphylatoxin is a potent chemoattractant for monocytes and granulocytes. Purification and characterization of the receptor for C5a have shown that this cell surface receptor is a G protein-coupled protein with a Mr of approximately 67,000. The receptor has been shown to be a phospholipase C (PLC) suggesting that the primary intracellular events that result from C5a stimulation may result from activation of specific phospholipases. We now report that fusion proteins encoding the amino-terminal extracellular domain of PLC gamma 1 or PLC gamma 2, but not PLC beta or PLC gamma 2, bind C5a. These results suggest that the primary intracellular response to C5a is mediated by PLC gamma 1.
